

Coffee Break

Question on Software or Operating system.

My Computer Toolbar

There are many hidden features in Window XP that are not documented, making a My Computer Toolbar is one of those undocumented features.

To create this toolbar, left click and drag your "My Computer" icon to the very top edge of your desktop then release your left mouse button. If you were close enough to the screen edge, you'll get a "My Computer" toolbar.

Left click and drag your "My Computer" to the very top edge of your desktop.

When at the very top edge of your desktop release your left mouse button. A new toolbar will display with the normal My Computer icons.

Once you have a toolbar up, right-click a blank area to customize it. You can specify large or Small icons by moving the mouse over View or whether you want a description of each item or not (show text), and if you want the title "My Computer" to be visible (Show Title). If you decide you don't want this toolbar, just choose "Close Toolbar". Moving to Toolbars option you can show all your Quick Launch icons but the main purpose is to show My Computer.

You can hold down your CRTL key while clicking one of the items on your new "My Computer" toolbar, you'll get a list of what's in the folder / drive.